

State fair week always brings its full quota of strangers to the city. It usually happens that the week is hot, a good deal more than dusty, and everybody has one or more guests to entertain. It is never a good plan to relegate the summer wardrobe to its winter quarters till after State fair, no matter how much fur and astrachan capes have been comtortable, even the day before. Threatened cool weather makes some visitors very careful to wear heavy clothes, and when promenading past the displays, with the sun pouring down, they long for some cool, sequestered spot. One excellent rule for State-fair garb is to wear a light-weight dress that rain won't spot, sun fade nor dust destroy. Be comfortable physically, and, with no fear for the garment's destruction, comfortable mentally. Take a warm wrapand an umbrella and be ready for anything, heat, cold, sunshine or rain. As a place for personal study the State fair is second to none. Now that there are new grounds, new buildings and new surroundings to be seen and visited, new phases of character will be exhibited. The school children's first week of restriction will be broken by a day or more at the fair. The yearly event in the lives of some of the out-of-town people will be to visit the city and fair. Anyone who has received the hospitality of friends out of town has a most auspicious time presented in which to recriprocate. With the fair and stores to visit daytimes and theater evenings, entertaining is decidedly easy. There is scarcely anything going on socially, and the visitor would feel more interested in everything else. Fall shopping for out-of-town people is the order, and merchants have in their new goods and displayed in the most attractive style. Altogether, State fair and the week devoted to it are of great interest to thou-Personal Mention.
